

The Journal in 2004

For 65 years, The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry has grown and matured along with modern psychiatry. The remarkable advances of today's neuroscience have informed and expanded our robust medical specialty.

And as our field increases its knowledge and ability to aid the sick, this journal ascends in the strength of its science and the resulting respect of its worldwide readership. We are the best-read peer-reviewed psychiatry journal, fifth in the world in impact factor, and first in growth among the top 5 journals.

The continuing excellence of JCP is a testimony to its dedicated team. The Journal's publisher, John S. Shelton, Ph.D., is a man of vision and character. The superb staff he has recruited and retained over many years at Physicians Postgraduate Press is intelligent, energetic, and committed. In Tucson, I am privileged to have an extraordinarily able editorial assistant, Ms. Pat Adams. My colleague, Marlene Freeman, M.D., recently became deputy editor and is doing a wonderful job of helping the Journal continue its expansion. Dr. Freeman conceived of and coordinates our new series on women's mental health.

As I acknowledge every year, the Journal benefits from the volunteer time and efforts of hundreds of anonymous peer reviewers. Their magnanimous labors are an essential ingredient in the product before you. Finally, every scientist, clinician, patient, and family member is dependent on the funds made available for the search for and study of new treatments for disease. I salute the wise lawmakers and generous private benefactors who ensure continued funding for medical science and our portion of it. I am also grateful for the hard-working researchers willing to propose and carry out important studies and the peer-review process and administrative infrastructure that support their work.

We are fortunate to live in times that have seen dramatic growth in the understanding of and treatments for mental disorders. This journal exists to translate science into clinical application in our rapidly expanding field. One of the greatest joys in my life has been to edit JCP during this era of unprecedented progress.
